2018

Gender equitable delivery

36,750+ boys coached

32,750+ girls coached

Working across 6 countries, our coaches, ambassadors and volunteers demonstrated that cricket is for all genders. 47% of all participants were young women or girls.

Building capacity

300+ coaches trained

From teachers to university students to multi-sport coaches, we trained leaders in 7 countries to deliver cricket for good.

Growing our reach

2 new ambassadors

We welcomed Emmy, from Rwanda, as well as formalising Kenyan Mathias's role as an official Ambassador.

1 new country

Working closely with Right to Play and UNHCR we delivered 2 projects in Jordan, addressing education access, gender equality and refugee inclusion.

"I am really honoured to have travelled round the country this year and help put everlasting smiles on kids' faces."

Karemera Joseph, Ambassador, Rwanda

Working together

13 partners and collaborators

As well as our core delivery partners we supported other organisations using cricket for good to develop coaching capacity in the UK, Nepal and Tanzania.

New delivery tools

12 HIV myth-busting cards

Developed to strengthen and diversify our HIV delivery, covering myths of transmission and challenging HIV and gender stereotypes.

1 set of Arabic coaching cards

Developed to support new coaches in Jordan, covering the basics of cricket and how to integrate messages on inclusion.

"Honestly I would say 2018 has been vibrantly successful for me in the works of CWB, the entire community of Kasese region now knows the benefits of our charity"

Isaneez Emmanuel, Ambassador, Uganda

What do our participants learn?

We used creative feedback sheets during and after sessions to ask - what do you learn from cricket?

Participants identified that they learn key health knowledge, life skills, and cricket skills, and have fun while doing it.
